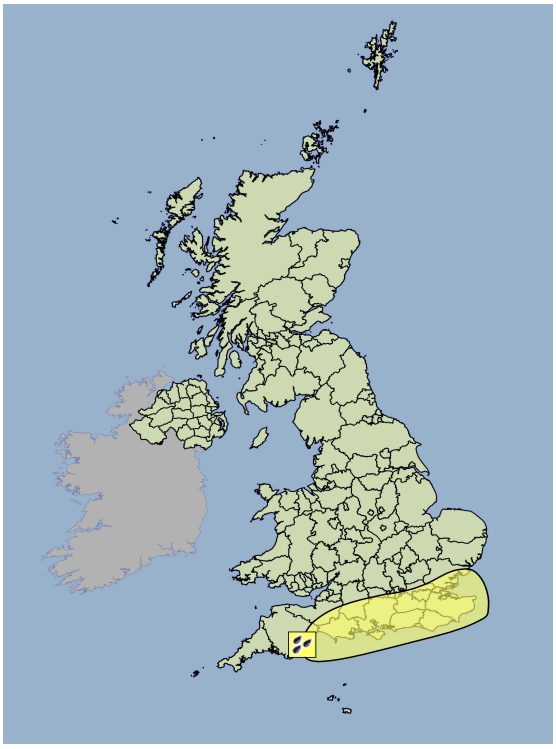
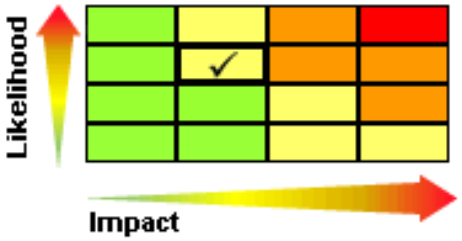
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
Organised bands of heavy showers and the odd thunderstorm, look like continuing to feed along the English Channel and then coming increasingly into parts of southern England as the flow backs more southerly overnight and at first on Monday. 5-10 mm may fall within an hour and perhaps 20-30 mm through the period in a few spots. The focus has shifted westwards through the day, and it's not impossible that a further update might be needed overnight.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Rain

Valid from 21:00 on Sun, 10th Jan 2016 until 09:00 on Mon, 11th Jan 2016

Bands of heavy showers, with localised hail and thunder, will affect parts of southern Britain throughout Sunday evening and overnight, some places affected more than others. The heaviest showers are expected to clear the eastern edge of the warning area, into the North Sea, during Monday morning.

The warning has been updated to extend the area west and slightly north again, which also means the original focus on southeast England looks less certain than it did. Whilst some areas will miss the heaviest rain, please be aware of the potential for surface water flooding causing localised disruption to travel, especially given the saturated ground.
